Tonight your Cruise Director Dave, DJ Dan and the Culinary Team throw a tropical pool party. Oranjestad, Aruba

Aruba's first inhabitants were the Caquetios Indians from the Arawak tribe. Fragments of the earliest known Indian settlements date back to about 1000 A.D, as do ancient painted symbols still visible on limestone caves found at Fontein, Ayo and elsewhere. Pottery remnants can still be seen at the Museum of Archaeology. Some centuries later, the first European landed on Aruban shores. Spanish explorer Alonso De Ojeda is thought to have arrived about 1499. The Spanish promptly exported the Indians to Santo Domingo in the Dominican Republic, where they were put to work in the copper mines. In 1636, near the culmination of the Eighty Years' War between Spain and Holland, the Dutch took possession of Aruba and remained in control for nearly two centuries. In 1805, during the Napoleonic Wars, the English briefly took control of the island but it was returned to Dutch control in 1816. Although Aruba continues to exist within the kingdom of the Netherlands, it functions independently.

FROM THE NAVIGATOR

The Zuiderdam passed between the western most point of Haiti, Cap Tiburon, and Navassa Island. From there we set a south easterly course across the Caribbean Sea towards Aruba. We expect to embark the pilot around 12:00nn, who will guide us into the port of Oranjestad.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

When going ashore today please make sure to carry a form of government-issued photo ID and stateroom key card.

Please note that at 1:30pm a scheduled drill for crew members only will be held. No action from guests is required.
